* In the following chapter, we explore layers, which enable transparency and hiding of layers, to enable various projects. * Adobe Premier Pro has become popular as a business-class video editing software. It enables you to edit multiple video and audio streams, and combines them together. * After Effects has become the industry standard for animations and video compositing, and provides tools for 3D, motion tracking, and other features, including support for complex transitions, and multi-layer and text overlays. * Apple's iMovie, another video editing tool, also provides you with a variety of controls and tools to edit video and audio, including effects, transitions, and text overlays. * * *
Chapter 4 ## Layers and Transparency In this chapter we discuss layers and how to put them to use in your next photo project. Layers are a key feature in Photoshop and most other graphics software programs. The basic concept is that you can stack layers on top of each other to create one image composed of many different elements. Each layer contains information about an image element, such as color, transparency, style, or text. Layers are another way of organizing an image, and layers are essential to any workflow. Layers are useful in all phases of the photo process: *
Creating and editing: They enable you to reorganize and combine layers to create a new image.
* Making composites: Layers are used to create composites, or layers of images. * Adding overlays: The ability to overlay text on an image is one of the most powerful tools in Photoshop. *
Creating and importing: Layers enable you to organize and combine images into a PDF, page for printing or as a document. * Exporting: Layers can be used to export images for websites or other needs.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a white balance adjustment circuit and white balance adjustment method of a digital camera. 2. Description of the Related Art A digital camera converts an image that an image pickup element has picked up into digital signals, and then corrects a color tone of the image. That is, the digital camera includes, for example, an RGB color filter provided on an image pickup element such as a CCD (Charge Coupled Device) and a DSP (Digital Signal Processor) that creates correction data for a color image from the digital signals obtained from the image pickup element. As methods for obtaining the correction data, a method using a monitor which displays the image after the image pickup element has picked up the image, and a method using a display which displays the image before the image pickup element has picked up the image are known. That is, in the method using the monitor, since the correction data of the image pickup element are obtained after the monitor displays the picked-up image on the basis of a picked-up image, the image on the monitor is unclear. On the other hand, in the method using the display, although the image on the display is clear, a problem arises. That is, since the monitor displays the image after the image pickup element has picked up the image, since the monitor does not correct a color tone of the image picked up by the image pickup element, the images that the monitor displays are different from the color of the images that the image pickup element has picked up. In order to solve the above problems, a white balance adjustment method is proposed (for example, refer to Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2002-63734). According to this method, firstly, an image picked up by an image pickup element is displayed on a monitor, and a region where the color tone of a flesh region is intensified is set by the monitor. Then, by adjusting a gain of a color signal of the image on the monitor on the basis of the color of the flesh region, it is possible to use the image on the monitor as a reference image with respect to a picked-up image displayed on the monitor. In addition, for example, a white balance adjustment method which uses a monitor by which a flesh region is more clearly displayed is disclosed. That is, firstly, a gain of a color signal of the image on the monitor is adjusted on the basis of a flesh color region. Then, the flesh color region is specified
